PROLOGUE

By Miss Patience L. Paschall

In the mountains, by the rivers,
In Alaskan days of old,
Came the hordes of people dazzled
By the magic word of "Gold!"

Foolish fancies — fond illusions,
Lured them onward, young and old,
Unprepared as little children
For the hardships and the cold.

It was fever, — it was madness,
Dream of riches turned them on,
Till the yellow dust destroyed them
And their very life was gone.

Some there were who knew survival,
But of all the gold they sought,
Memory left a few bright nuggets,
Fondly cherished, dearly bought.
